

Having just flown this week I would ask the commissioners to first fly in economy class plane that is sold out. During the period before the flight when cell phone's are allowed in the cabin one would find at least 50 cell phone conversations going on. Next I would ask that you try sitting beside someone for four hours who might actually talk on the cell phone non-stop. (unlimited minutes encourages a lot of use.) Please remember that your frustration of listening doesn't even factor in having children along. If my young child had to sit beside a person who talked on the phone and didn't use English that was suitable for young children I'd be really upset. And since the plane is full the flight attendants wouldn't be able to change my seat. Please do not allow the use of cell phones, or other audio/video communication devices that encourage passengers to verbally talk to people who are not on the plane. I'd also be curious to know how a cell phone at 30,000 feet would react to a 911 call?

Thanks,

Mark Strang